"The fact that so many immigrants, especially among those born in Sweden to parents with a foreign background, have made a number of their lack of gratitude has been made possible by so many on the left joining the chorus of complaints. The fact that this has happened is in turn due to the fact that the gratitude that "Swedes of several generations" also felt in the past - towards the state, the system and to some extent social democracy - has also been lost to an increasingly greater degree.

In this way, different events interact, one ideal is exchanged for another. The ability to feel gratitude, like the ability to feel guilt, should not be hidden away. On the contrary, they must be cultivated because these feelings serve as important guides in an increasingly difficult-to-navigate reality.”
