... order to move forward, the dividing line must begin to be drawn between those who want to be part of society and those who oppose it, between those who behave and those who do not protect the values that the majority stand behind.
There is also a need for a settlement, especially within the left, with the view of those born abroad as a group that would value freedom lower than the majority population, or alternatively be less able to understand how the undemanding politics in the field of integration results in increased crime and vulnerability."
